Woodbridge believes that site — and the harmony you can bring to it — are key to making the world's best wines. He talks of soils as 'underground superstructures that have to be made powerful, diverse and disease resistant'. To do so, organic mushroom compost in heaping doses is spread in Woodbridge's estate vineyards — if 20 tons per acre is recommended, he layers in 50 tons to create a 'mycelium culture that feeds the vines', which are culled to one cluster per shoot.
